

Niue, the world's largest coral island, is self-governing but in association with New Zealand. Since the opportunities the island affords are limited, more Niueans live outside Niue than in it, giving it one of the most eccentric population distributions in the world. The state church, Ekalesia Niue has a very strong presence in the country.

Niue, the world's largest coral island, is self-governing but in association with New Zealand. Since the opportunities the island affords are limited, more Niueans live outside Niue than in it, giving it one of the most eccentric population distributions in the world. The state church, Ekalesia Niue has a very strong presence in the country.

